THREE MAJOR GOLF

The fact that the game can be played leisurely, without undue physical effort and minus any likelihood of overtaxation, has no place in the golfing habits of some of the young and robust exponents of the game around Philadelphia. Several weeks ago Fred Knight caused a mild sensation by going out and playing eight rounds in one day, averaging slightly less than eighty-five strokes for the full distance.

Now comes an even more ambitious effort by Eddie Styles of Old York Road. Styles completed ten rounds of 180 holes on his home course a few days ago before he called it a day. He began at 5:53 o'clock in the morning and finished at 8:32 in the evening. He had an average of slightly less than 30 strokes per round. And by way of showing that he was still going strong he did the last nine holes in $6, just one stroke over par.

No doubt the two victories over A. L. Walker, Jr., and W. A. Barber, Jr., by W. E. Truesdell, the Garden City links vetran, and his elderly pertner, George H. Crocker, at Ekwanok the past week were a source of considerable pleasure to the Garden City player. It will be recalled that Walker defeated him in the final match of the mid-winter tournament at Pinehurst last winter.

Lieut. Oscar E. Carlson of Siwanoy, who has just returned from overseas service in France, watched Walter Hagen through his final round at North Shore Friday. He has not yet been mustered out of service. He states that he had a chance to play a few rounds of golf at Nice, but doesn't feel good enough to get into the Westchester championships.
